【 Nature Information 】

⚠ Beware overhead

When you enter the forest, you could see trees are covered by heavy snow. Snows on the tree are heavy enough to break thick branches, so It's not a good idea to pass under them. if you have to pass or stop under the tree check to make sure there are no dangerous snow above your head.

Yezo sika deer

A subspecies of the sika deer inhabits in Hokkaido, the largest deer in Japan. In winter, they eat bamboo grass and bark, but if they eat too much bark, it can cause irreparable damage to tree. Male deers have antlers that are shed and replaced every spring.

And if one deer runs out onto the road, several may chase it, so be careful not to hit them with your car.

Black woodpecker

it is the largest woodpecker found in Japan. In Japan, it is distributed from Hokkaido to northern Tohoku, also designated as an endangered species because its population is restricted.
